WEST VIRGINIA ELECTION.

Republican Majority Over 4,000.

The Wheeling Intelligencer of yesterday publishes the official and report of majorities in thirty-three counties of the State, which show a net Republican majority of 4,000. These thirty-three counties in 1867 cast 40,000 votes, leaving thirty-one counties to hear from to make up the entire vote. Basing our estimate upon the average of the vote of the entire State, the Republican majority will be increased from 500 to 1,000 in the thirty-one counties to be heard from, making the majority in the State foot up from 4,500 to 5,500. The Republican majority in the thirty-three counties in the lower part of the State has been reported, but no definite account has been received from the thirty-one counties in the upper part of the State. The Democratic majority in the lower part of the State is 1,000, and in the upper part of the State the Republican majority is 5,000, leaving a net Republican majority of 4,000. The Democratic majority in the thirty-one counties

Pennsylvania and Illinois nominated into Allegheny and the county gets within a few votes of nine thousand majority in October. Mr. Seymour is coming, and we promise him that in November Allegheny will give a majority not a vote under nine thousand. It is a hard fact to contemplate, no doubt, but nothing that the weeping Courier can do will change it. "Eleven thousand in the sun."

In the office of the Post has not signed for that ten feet and would not be convicted of cruelty to animals, he will take the name in. The persistent display of gore-ye over the Allegheny Democratic victory in West Virginia was very humiliating to the tired and dismaying to the Democrats, especially those who were led to stake their money on the correctness of the Post's prophecies.

Mr. Seymour took the field to show to those who asked for his withdrawal that as far as that was concerned he was master of the situation. The arrangements for swinging around the circle were made to silence the complaints that followed the nomination by Brennan, Evans & Co., that Seymour would not be withdrawn. Nothing less, they saw, would give Seymour a show even for Kentucky. This is the explanation of the funeral march round the Ridge and over the Alleghenies.

A correspondent is going the rounds of the press to the effect that the treaty between the United States and China caused much excitement in the latter country, and that the "Chinese press" is very much the organ of the imperial government. The other papers printed in Chinese characters are owned by English firms, and as a matter of course advocate a policy which is agreeable to England and Englishmen. The only authority for this statement is the Shanghai News Letter, the organ of the American commercial interest there.

Agreement not much noise has attended the campaign since the victory won by the Republicans in October, the Republicans, as in all contests, have nowhere been idle. In our own State, the machinery has been kept moving, and ready for the requirements of November, when an increased Republican vote will be polled. But the most important feature of the mobilization campaign has been the changes to Grant from the Democratic lines. In the State they will be numbered by thousands, and these accessions and the presence of the Chinese question, we are persuaded, will cancel our majority to rather, if not three times, what it then was.

AN OLD SAW WORN OUT IN THE EAST WARD.

The Pittsburgh Post, alluding to our comments upon Governor Seymour's recent speeches, says: "We are persuaded nothing but the contention of a falling out for private gains, would have attempted the ordinarily sore Editor of the Commercial since Armored the world home to be false," and adds, "will the Editor of the Commercial now interpose his personal opposition to sustain the assertion that Governor Seymour's record has not been the proper record to be hugging it into the discussion, but we will answer the Post in a manner that we hope will prove satisfactory.

In accepting the Post's challenge, we owe here tender our thanks to that journal for giving us an opportunity to review the antecedent record of the dominant leaders of the Democracy, prior to and during the war. Our language was that "the same Seymour is the same Seymour to-day that he was when he denounced the war as one to coerce the free New York citizens to support it, and when he advanced in his speeches one current allegation after another, one current allegation after another, from "Lincoln" to "Illinois."

We now propose to prove this assertion by such authority as we trust will be acceptable to the Post since it inconsistently is the utterances of the gentlemen whose names it so often cites in that journal. Neither to mention Post have made the corrections of the proofs we are about to submit.

In his speech delivered at Tweddle Hall, Albany, on the 31st of January, 1861, Governor Seymour made use of the following language:

> If Governor Seymour did not mean that the action of the Government, in preparing to defend itself from the assaults of the rebels, was equally as revolutionary as the rebellion itself, will he endeavor to explain to his audience tonight what he did mean? Will other Governor Seymours or the Post undertake to give us a new interpretation to his assertion, made in the same speech, that:

> Rebellion, the mass of loyal men in the country have held the belief that this was the language of a man who was a stranger to patriotic sentiments, and who either too cowardly to defend his Government, or secretly sympathized with the enemies. If it is the power of the Post or Governor Seymour to influence the minds of the public of this impression, neither will ever find a better opportunity than the present occasion furnishes.

In a speech delivered at Utica, New York, October 29th, 1861, Governor Seymour said:

> It cannot be said that Seymour could not help it if Fessenden was in the Tammany Convention. But how does it happen that Seymour is just the man for Fessenden? Has anybody ever read in a speech by Seymour a line or a word denouncing the butchery over which he presided? It is not too late to do it yet. See if he does it.

THE PARTY OF ASSASSINATION.

We of the North have little conception of what Southern Union men are compelled to endure at the hands of the supporters of Seymour and Blair. To say nothing of the common hunt made for negroes who refuse to join the Democrats, the life of a Union man who boldly stands out to defend his principles, in many places is not worth a straw. Death is the almost inevitable penalty for such a course. Some columns have been recorded in connection in Louisiana, Georgia, South Carolina, and Arkansas. In the last named State Mr. Blount was the latest victim, and every Union man, of all complexions, feels that his time may be next. To show the spirit that animates Union men, we print the following letter, written by Mr. Blount a short time before he was assassinated:

> LITTLE ROCK, Ark., October 2, 1868.
> To T. A. Fulton, Brownsville, Tenn.
>
> DEAR SIR: Thanks for favor in one of documents. We are threatened with a repetition of the bloody scenes of 1866. We are unwilling to submit to another massacre of Union men, and will resist to the last extremity. We are making all the preparations we can, and are determined to sell our lives as dearly as possible. Let the Democracy come on. We are ready for them. Yours truly,
>
> JOHN M. BLOUNT.

Such a foe to Seymour and Blair could not live long in Arkansas, and he was murdered in cold blood.

While these things are going on in the South, Mr. Seymour is promulgating the country reciting doleful cases over which the people to place the Government in the hands of the party that admits into the convention the representatives of the people whose outrages and without which not a single Southern State would vote for Democrats and Blairs. It is doing no violence to the facts to say that in the South it is the party that seeks to accomplish its ends through murder and assassination. The recent outrages in the States we have named were committed by villains carrying the Seymour and Blair flag. Governor Seymour need not blame us if this sounds harshly. It is the natural result of his own coming.

SMALL NOTES.

The Chicago Times says immense numbers flock to see and hear Mr. Seymour wherever he goes, and argues an encouraging future therefrom. The Times should bear in mind that if our people are famous for anything it is for their eagerness to get a glimpse of the man about to be sawn off and hear what he has to say. But the fact has never been counted as favorable to the progress of civilization.

Mr. Seymour concluded his Cleveland speech on the following delightful strain:

> "Now I must bid you good-bye. In all probability these are the last words you will hear from my lips."

In all seriousness, is not this the language of darkness, and is it ever employed except when the heart is filled with sad emotions in view of a conviction of things of more moment?

We submit, do not the habitual utterances of Mr. Seymour indicate a mind oppressed—a disordered mental condition?

Know Nothings appear to govern the Mexican people. The Mexican Congress has rejected the report of the majority of the Committee on Internal Improvements. Commissioners of foreigners. The grand want of Mexico is the completion of the Vera Cruz and Mexico City Railroad. This road has already been built by the English Company which secured a charter from Maximilian. Now their work goes for nought, and the lazy Mexicans who might have found remunerative employment on the road, can "fly" aids and pursue each fighting without fear of interruption.

The Post is reduced to its supplementary resources. "The campaign is reduced to fine and dramatic proportions. It is not Blair and Grant any more. The World now proudly announces that it is Seymour and Grant." Starting the name of their congressional ticket, it adds: It is "needless now to explain the issues." We should say not. In fact, the World would rather not, especially since Seymour has undertaken to substitute a lesser for a greater issue. But how will the World get rid of Blair and his friends for those utterances when the smoke of battle floats away? We shall not be surprised to see the editors which characterized the course of the Blairites, the Reid-ites, the Brookses and the Donohues regaled when the time for balancing is made up between Democrats and Democrats.

The Mexican people are but little if any better off for the Juarez than they were under Santa Anna's rule. Discontent and deeds of violence are the prominent traits of the present government. While the official accounts report everything quiet, the Mexican journals relate a series of the most shocking outrages that ever disgraced a civilized people. Only last week the evening of the 15th ult., while the citizens of Guanajuato city were preparing for the festivities of the next day, eighty mounted robbers entered a neighboring village, three miles distant, pillaged it, murdered the few people remaining in it by shocking barbarities, and made off with their 12 gallon pinoles. Assassination is one of frequent occurrence, and the government seems to be utterly unable to restrain the progress. Blood is the principal item of a people who, in the midst of robberies and anarchy, sit down complacently to witness bull fights.

The World contemptuously asks, "In what battle did General Wallace ever fight?" The question is easily answered, for he helped to fight the battles of the Union by contributing funds to the Sanitary Fair, which netted nearly $100,000. He did all that lay in his power to promote the war to a successful close. Now what battle did Seymour ever participate in, outside of the cotton balloon box, and the Government when he declared the draft should be stopped in New York "if it cost the State a million of men or a dollar" to the war? Did he not hinder men from enlisting and countermand enlistments in the draft? Did not Seymour, the World and the draft congress to defeat the government, and were they not signally rebuffed?

The manner in which the World criticises those Democrats who do not accept its sentiments as their own is amusing. It is not content to treat them as traitors, but it must also be insulted to produce anything but contempt in the minds. "War Democrats are ingrained fanatics from the start." There is nothing in politics in this language, although it will not prove very palatable to the party alluded to. Whether "ingrained fanatics" or not, the World covers the flight of those creatures in our direction is to be held out as an argument to the honest family countenance that there is some, not reference in the direction of their abandonment," we think the magnitude of the Democratic party will be limited to light heels in a manner that will not be over-fatal.

It is said that Mrs. Rae's daughter is engaged upon the "Life of Andrew Johnson," now consisting of a romance, but it is one would opinion, that her imagination is neither wide nor powerful enough to be positive in the subject.

When the Wandering Minstrel addresses his audience he might not begin to tell us not to do so dangerously. Especially when he is in the neighborhood of the political devil, and it would be a great pity if he should be unable, the poor Buchanan, to keep on his legs till he is carried off. All the strength he has left should be devoted, not to the political graveyard, but to the task of keeping a good generation of cotton out of the ditch, or under the cotton more embarrassing, he should have to be all wrong. The cost which used to the South, "we are not going to succeed you, we have no constitutional right to endorse you, we have no power to do it," is not encouraging enough the collection plate for the relief of the rebels, should not be permitted to appear in agony over a lack of appreciation on the part of Pittsburgh people. Let him stick.

A first-class review of the field estimates the cotton crop at 2,500,000 bales—a little more than last year—the total value of which is estimated at about $500,000,000.

A romance exploded occurred in a car on the Great Western, England, recently, by which one lives were lost and some injured to a most wonderful degree. The explosion was occasioned by the dump. The explosion was occasioned by the dump. The explosion was occasioned by the dump

The local money markets is working much closer and has the appearance of scarcity of money. It is doubtless in sympathy with the Eastern market, which is reported to be in the most stringent condition. The last statement of the New York city banks does not reflect the stringent condition of the market. If so said that the combination have on deposit in their confidente banks from six to ten millions of dollars on call over certified checks, and, although they are liable to be drawn at any moment, they seem to continue to compel the great business men to accept the above as a basis for their payments on reserve, thus giving an entirely false statement of their real condition.
